Having a strong anchor like Costco will be great for the mall and a real asset for the community. I bought something at NC Fair yesterday, and walking through the mall, with so many storefronts empty or "disguised" as businesses with no open means to enter is frankly, depressing (even though there were a lot of people there Sunday afternoon so at least it wasn't "eerie" like a few of my midweek trips have been). A sad mall does nothing to show that Escondido is a vibrant place to live. Plus the location, less than a mile from my house, is ideal for my husband and I.
